Iranian mullahs express anger at European Union (EU) non-compliance with nuclear agreement after EU foreign policy chief Federica Mogherini published a series of diplomatic notes to the country on Thursday. After three months of negotiation with Iran, the European Union announced on 13 July that the P5+1 group of countries (the five permanent members of the UN Security Council—the U.S., U.K., France, China, and Russia—plus Germany) and Iran had reached an agreement over Iran's nuclear program. The negotiations resulted in an interim accord giving limited relief from the economic sanctions imposed on Iran, while a final agreement will be reached in six months or less, to be implemented from then until 2025. In a statement issued on Thursday, the EU announced that after the signing of the agreement, Iran and EU member states will discuss the structure of a long-term implementation. The statement has been referred to in some Iranian media as the 'corrective mechanism' for the EU's agreements with Iran. The EU's statement was closely followed by three diplomatic notes, the first of which was published on 13 July and the following two notes were published just over a week ago on 16 July. EU spokesman Jan Figel said that Iran did not accept the EU statements, the first of which had been accompanied by the following comments: "We wish to emphasize that this declaration does not represent a legal binding instrument and is not an instrument of implementation." He said that Mogherini had made the statement with the agreement of all 27 member states of the EU, according to the text of the statements. Although he did not specify which of the letters was being referred to by the EU statement, Iranian media referred to the two published on 16 July as the 'legally binding instrument' and 'correct
