The aim of this study was to compare the validity of calculation formulas for the isometric strength of dorsiflexors and plantar flexors of barefoot healthy adults using a Biodex system. Thirty-six healthy young adults (15 males and 21 females; 20.3+/-3.2 years old) were measured for isometric strength of dorsiflexors and plantar flexors using Cybex 6000 dynamometer. The free-weight bar that can be raised and lowered via push-pull action was used. The data of the peak torque and the torque at a specific angle were collected, respectively, and the formulas of the torque estimated with their equivalent muscle mass were calculated. The validity of the two formulas was evaluated by comparing with the direct measurement. The validity was supported only for that of plantar flexors (p>0.05). The new formula presented here is more valid to estimate the isometric strength of dorsiflexors.News Upcoming Events Heinold About Health Inspection Requirements Inspection will be conducted during normal work hours. Testing FDA has not required sampling-based microbiological tests that meet or exceed the product specification limits in the product labeling. FDA has established a value of 10 CFU/bottle (this value must be applied for the entire product) for commercially fermented foods with no preservatives. In addition, for most drinking wines, no more than 90 CFU/bottle of potentially spoilage bacteria should be present. Testing under the regulatory program is optional, and must be requested through the company'
